New Annuals for 2008

Begonia – Dragon Wing Red - The Dragon Wing red begonia works great in full sun or partial shade. In full sun, the plant is more compact and the foliage develops a reddish cast. In partial shade, the look is lush, tropical and exotic. Dragon Wing red begonias are also ideal for hanging baskets on the front porch or in large containers, and they can put on some astonishing growth. A 10-inch basket planted in a large tub or whisky barrel in late April will probably get 36 inches tall and as wide or larger by the end of summer.

These Impatiens look incredible in hanging baskets and containers. Of course they are equally at home in beds and since they spread, you'll need fewer to cover the same amount of space as traditional Impatiens. They have the added bonus of handling heat better than common Impatiens. Mature plants reach a height of 16 - 20" and can spread up to 2 feet.
